According to the Python os module documentation `os.popen` has been deprecated since Python 2.6.. I think the solution for modern Python is to use `check_output()` from the `subprocess` module. From the `subprocess` Python documentation: `subprocess.check_output(args, *, stdin=None, stderr=None, shell=False, universal_newlines=False)` Run command with arguments and return its output as a byte string.

Does this surprise you? Well, consider to what extent you and the people around you have set routines on a daily basis. Most people behave repeatedly in the same way according to the precise setting or location they find themselves in. Needless to say, this makes all of us really predictable and as a result of this, the likelihood of a crime happening is the intersection of probabilities ...
