It is possible something on your system corrupted the zone files in some way. My recommendation would be that if the files are not reading correctly I would stop the server on the slave, delete the corrupt zone files (or if you prefer, rename them to move them out of the way), and restart the slave server.

Windows 10 Home can get in a state where it requires admin to change the time zone, even though there's no group policy. Running the command line tool tzutil from an admin console window opened from my user account, elevated via UAC (as opposed to the admin account, which the OP tried), let me change the time zone.. Open an admin console window (e.g. Alt+X,A).
